The verdant campus of the National Law School of India University (NLSIU) in Bengaluru has had a makeover in the past year. A new amphitheatre has come up next to the library block while landscaped ponds have been built into some of the open spaces on the campus, to give students more space for interaction. Meanwhile, the main walkway has been redesigned with tactile paving to assist the vision-impaired. At India's premier law institute, where inclusivity and diversity are guiding principles, the infrastructure facelift is in tandem with its academic growth phase.

In 2024, the institute will welcome 300 students in its flagship BA LLB course, 120 in the three-year LLB programme and a like number in the LLM course, taking the total headcount across batches to around 1,300, says Vice Chancellor Sudhir Krishnaswamy. To keep pace with the growing student population, NLSIU has increased its faculty strength. "Starting July 2024, we will touch (a headcount of) 100 in faculty, and we will go all the way to 125," he says. This will help maintain a teacher-student ratio of roughly 1:15.

In academics, a big area of change over the past 12-18 months has been in Generative Artificial Intelligence, or Gen AI. "The emergence of those professions that is likely to be deeply disrupted by the emergence of Gen AI. For us, as a law university, that means at least three things," says Krishnaswamy. "First, we get our students to become expert users and familiar with these new tools but, much more than that, in a cur-

3-YEAR LLB VS 5-YEAR LLB: WHICH IS BETTER?

The five-year LLB course and the three-year one cater to different cohorts of students. The former, an integrated undergraduate course, is typically the preferred route for young students keen on pursuing a degree in law immediately after their 10+2 qualifying examination. The three-year LLB course, meanwhile, is an option for students who already have an undergraduate degree in any discipline, which is also an eligibility criterion for admission.

The three-year LLB programme is the older of the two law degrees, predating the reforms in legal education by the establishment of specialised law universities. India's first five-year integrated BA LLB programme was started by NLSIU in 1988. Subsequently, several other law universities have been set up over the past three decades with the five-year integrated LLB course as their flagship programme.

Typically, most graduates of the five-year LLB pursue a placement in corporate law firms or opt for a career in litigation.

In 2022, NLSIU launched a three-year LLB (Hons) programme with the objective of providing an opportunity to students who had specialised in other disciplines to pursue legal education. The three-year LLB programme at NLSIU offers a theoretically more rigorous course compared to the BA LLB, according to Sudhir Krishnaswamy. The first batch of NLSIU students of the three-year LLB will graduate in July 2025.

THE METHODOLOGY

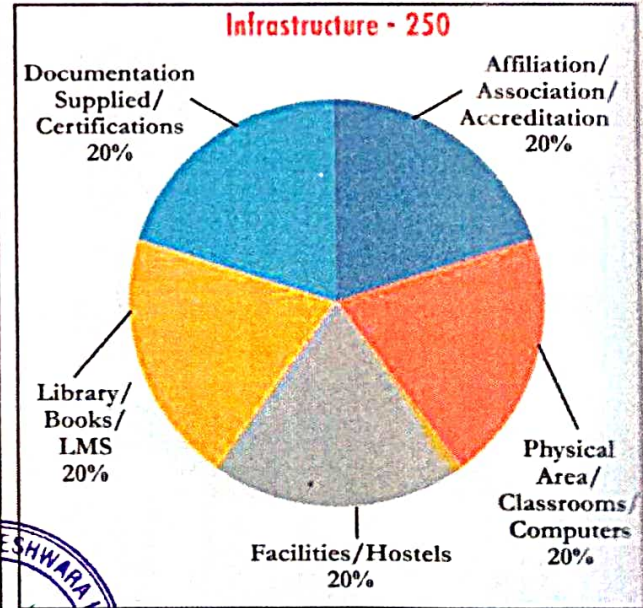

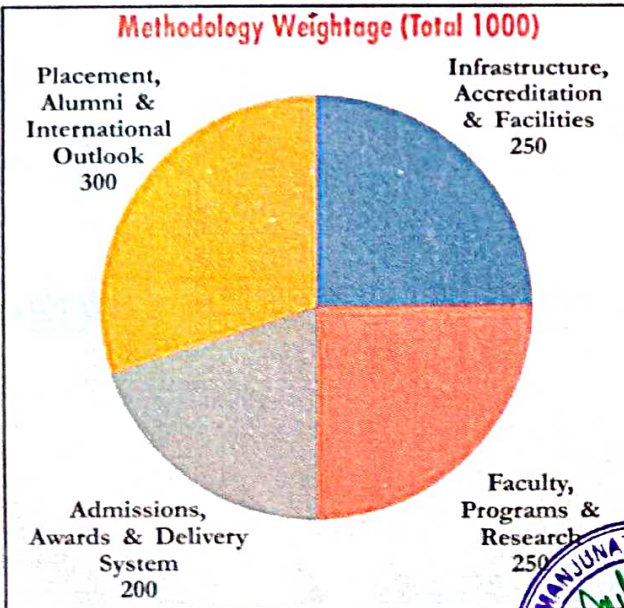

How We Ranked Law Schools 2024

Methodology is paramount in conducting surveys as it serves as the blueprint for the entire research process, guiding researchers in the systematic collection, analysis and interpretation of data. A well-defined methodology ensures the accuracy, reliability and validity of survey findings by outlining the procedures for sampling, data collection instruments and data analysis techniques. By adhering to a rigorous methodology, researchers can minimise biases, errors and inconsistencies, thereby enhancing the credibility of survey results. Additionally, methodology facilitates the replication of studies by other researchers, enabling comparisons across different contexts and over time. Ethical considerations, such as participant confidentiality and informed consent, are also embedded within the methodology, ensuring that surveys are conducted in an ethical and responsible manner. Ultimately, methodology is indispensable in ensuring the integrity and quality of survey research, providing researchers with the framework needed to generate meaningful insights and contribute to the advancement of knowledge in their respective fields.

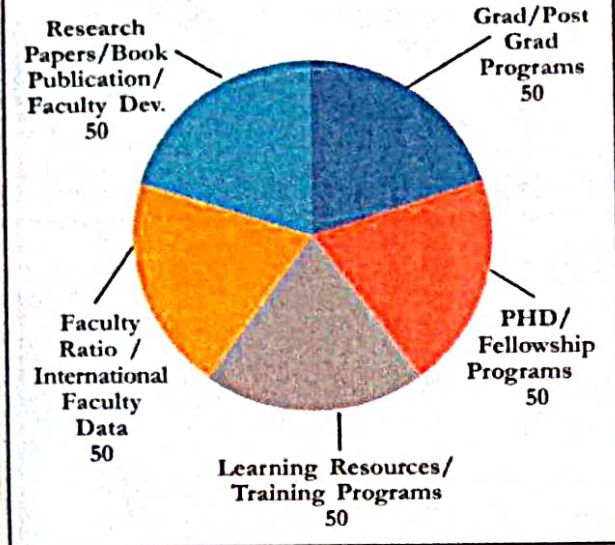

The Covid-19 pandemic has ushered in an era of unprecedented disruption, reshaping the landscape of survey research and posing formidable challenges to researchers worldwide. With social distancing measures rendering in-person interviews and fieldwork unfeasible, and traditional data collection methods inaccessible, researchers have been compelled to chart new territories in the realm of survey methodologies. However, amidst these challenges, the post pandemic epoch has unveiled a silver lining—a canvas for innovation in survey research, driven by the imperative to adapt to the digital milieu.

In navigating this new terrain, researchers have turned to online surveys as a cornerstone of data collection, leveraging the ubiquity of digital platforms to engage participants remotely. The advent of tools like Zoom, Skype and other video conferencing technologies has facilitated virtual interviews focus groups and surveys, enabling researchers to transcend geographical constraints and access a broader pool of respondents.

Embarking on this journey of adaptation, we initiated a comprehensive survey targeting Law Schools, extending invitations for voluntary participation. Emphasising the significance of their contributions, we articulated our commitment to ranking only those institutes that responded to our questionnaire. Soliciting responses from 50 top institutions, we garnered completed surveys from 35, laying the groundwork for our ranking endeavour.

Central to our methodology was the pursuit of utmost validation and verification, underpinning the integrity and reliability of our rankings. Adopting a rigorous validation process at each stage of the ranking procedure, we meticulously verified the data received from participating institutions, ensuring its accuracy and fidelity.

Verification emerged as a lynchpin in our methodology, serving as a bulwark against inaccuracies and misrepresentations. Recognising the exigencies of the pandemic, we pivoted to virtual verification for 90% of the responding institutions, underscoring our unwavering commitment to upholding the highest standards of data integrity.

With the data meticulously collected and validated, we embarked on the arduous task of identifying the key determinants underpinning our ranking framework. These encompassed a myriad of factors, including academic excellence, research output, faculty calibre, student satisfaction, employability of graduates, diversity and international outlook. Significantly, we accorded differential weights to these factors, reflecting their relative importance in shaping the quality and reputation of a Law institute.

Armed with a nuanced understanding of the key determinants, we proceeded to rank the Law Schools based on their performance across these metrics. The culmination of this rigorous evaluation yielded a comprehensive ranking framework, offering prospective Law students invaluable insights to help in their academic pursuits and career aspirations.

In conclusion, while ranking Law Schools presents formidable challenges, our methodology stands as a testament to rigour, reliability and methodological excellence. Through a meticulous validation and verification process, coupled with a nuanced evaluation of key factors, we endeavour to empower aspiring Law students with the tools necessary to make informed decisions about their educational journey. We are confident that our rankings will serve as a beacon of illumination, guiding the path to academic excellence and fulfilment in the dynamic landscape of legal

A CLEAR VERDICT

THE PREMIER LAW COLLEGE HAS DOUBLED ITS STUDENT INTAKE IN THREE YEARS AND ALSO INTRODUCED NEW, CUTTING-EDGE COURSES. NEXT UP IS CRACKING THE GLOBAL RANKINGS

BY AJAY SUKUMARAN

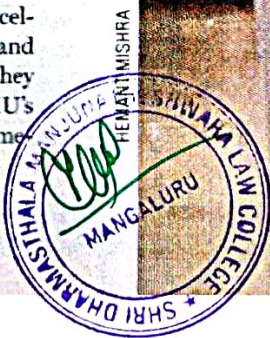

No. 1 NATIONAL LAW SCHOOL OF INDIA UNIVERSITY (NLSIU), BENGALURU

Expansion has been the watchword at the National Law School of India University (NLSIU) this past year. The institute will begin its new academic year in July with 1,200 students, twice the headcount it had in 2019 when it embarked on a roadmap of growth. That, inevitably, has called for a proportional increase in every other sphere—faculty strength, for instance, is now 68, compared to 45 a year ago.

But for India's premier law institute, this is still just the halfway mark. "Our projected growth plan is that, by 2028, we will reach the maximum number of students, between 2,200 and 2,400. It will be double what we are in July 2023," says vice-chancellor Prof. Sudhir Krishnaswamy. This pace of growth is radically different from what NLSIU has been used to. Yet, it was the need of the hour. The institute has been a leader in legal education since its inception in 1988. But through these past three decades, it was a relatively "small, organic enterprise", though a pioneer. "What is important is that we have managed to scale up while maintaining our excellence," says the V-C. It's not just about the increase in students and faculty but equally the wide social diversity and backgrounds they represent, he points out. One of the key components of NLSIU's performance in the recent National Institutional Ranking Frame

GURUSPEAK

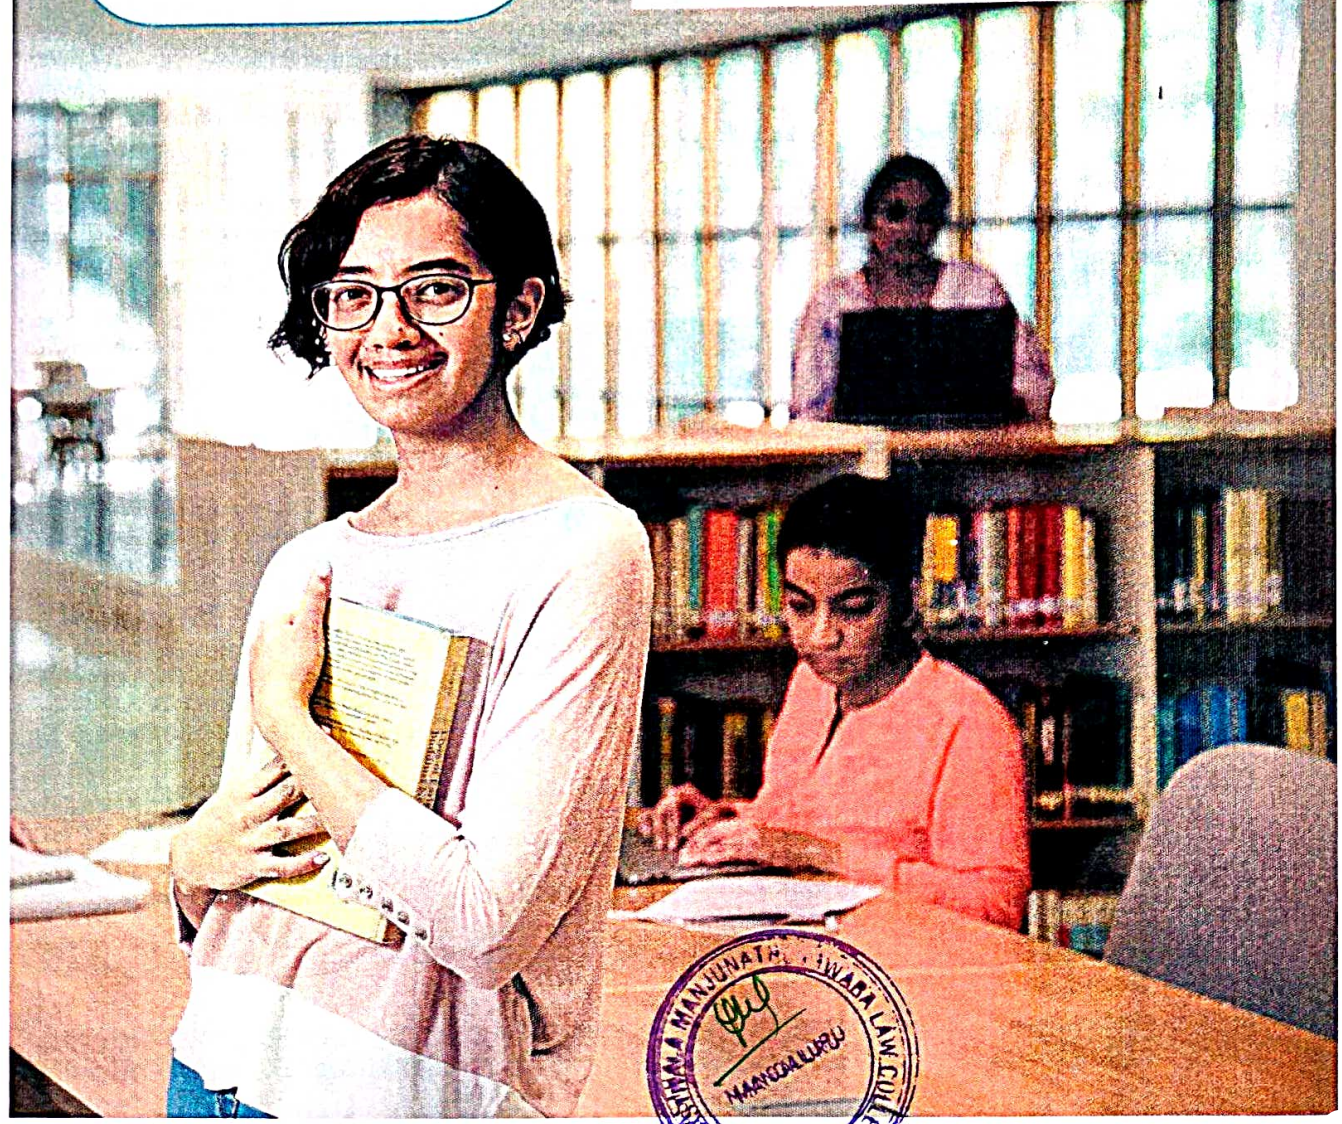

“For the first 30 years of this university, we were a small, organic enterprise, although a hugely successful one. What I think is important and notable is that we have managed to scale up while maintaining our levels of excellence”

SUDHIR KRISHNASWAMY
Vice-chancellor, NLSIU, Bengaluru

CSR Law Schools Survey Results 2023

THE METHODOLOGY

How We Ranked Law Schools 2023

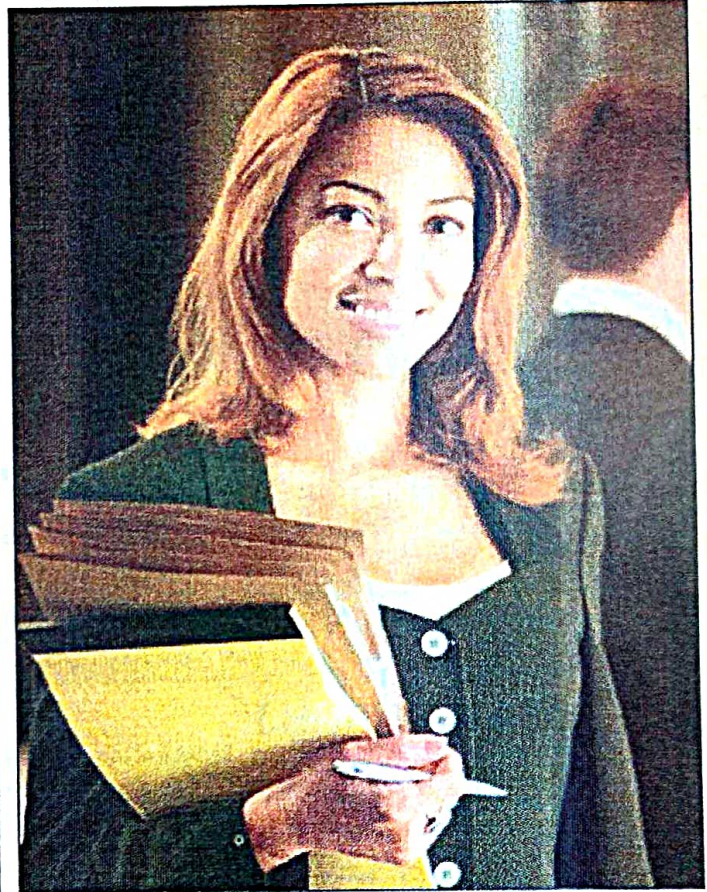

The Covid-19 pandemic had caused significant disruptions in our daily lives, making it a challenging time for researchers looking to conduct surveys. In-person interviews and fieldwork were no longer feasible due to social distancing restrictions, and traditional methods of data collection became inaccessible. Despite these challenges, however, the post-pandemic era presented new opportunities for innovation in survey research.

Conducting surveys in the post-pandemic era requires researchers to adopt approaches that better suit the digital environment. Online surveys, for instance, have become more important than ever, as people have become accustomed to working and socialising remotely. Researchers can leverage online platforms such as Zoom, Skype and other video-conferencing tools to conduct virtual interviews, focus groups or other surveys.

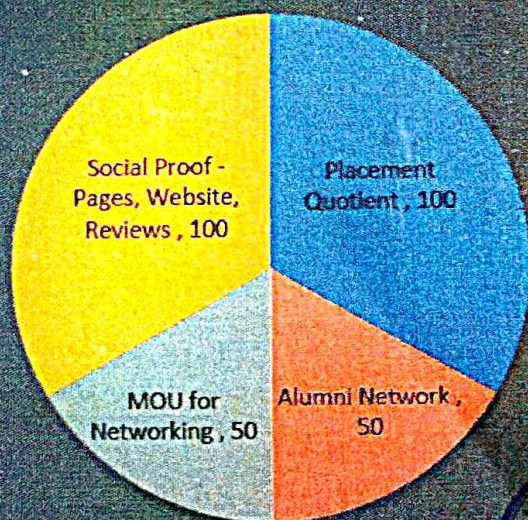

To begin with, we conducted a survey in which we invited Law Schools to participate. We made it clear that participation was voluntary, and we would only rank those institutes that responded to our questionnaire. We sent out questionnaires to 50 top law institutes and received completed responses from 36 of them.

It is important to note that we aimed for the highest level of validation and verification to ensure that our rankings were accurate and reliable. To achieve this, we adopted a rigorous validation process at every stage of the ranking process, including verification of the data we received from the institutes.

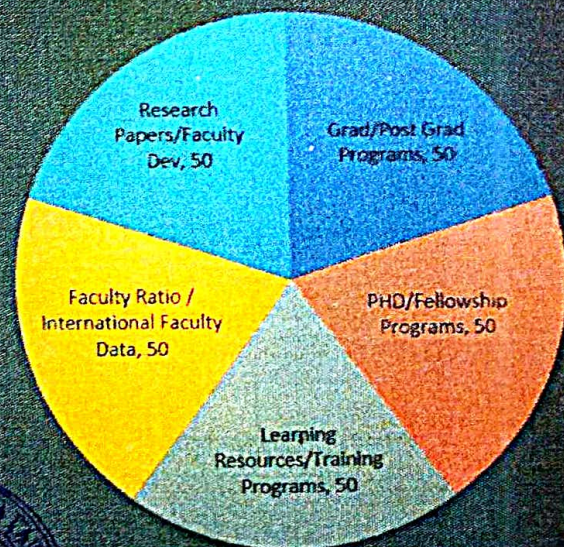

Verification is crucial to the ranking process because it ensures that the information we receive is correct and reliable. We carried out virtual verification for 90% of the institutes

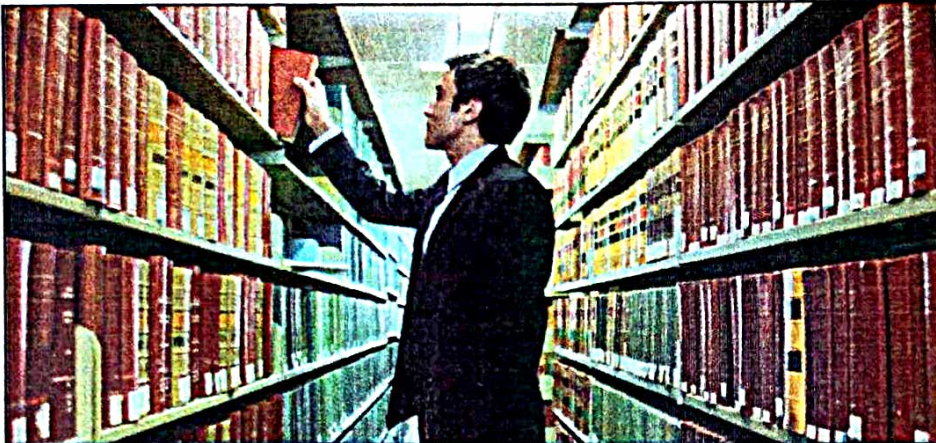

Placement, Alumni & International Outlook (Total 300)

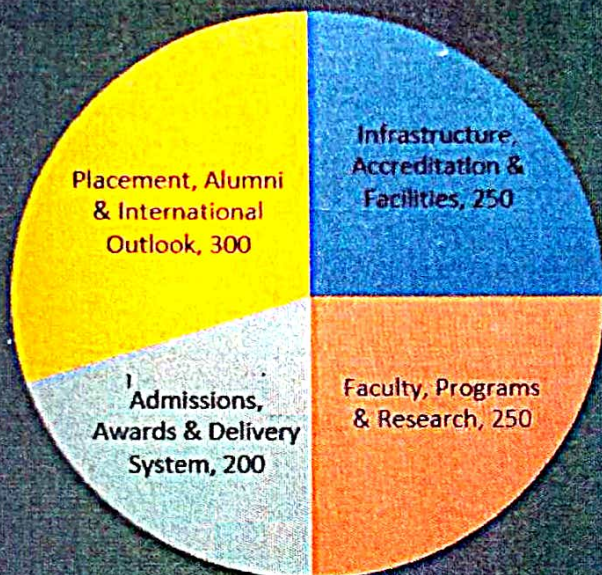

Faculty, Programs & Research (Total 250)

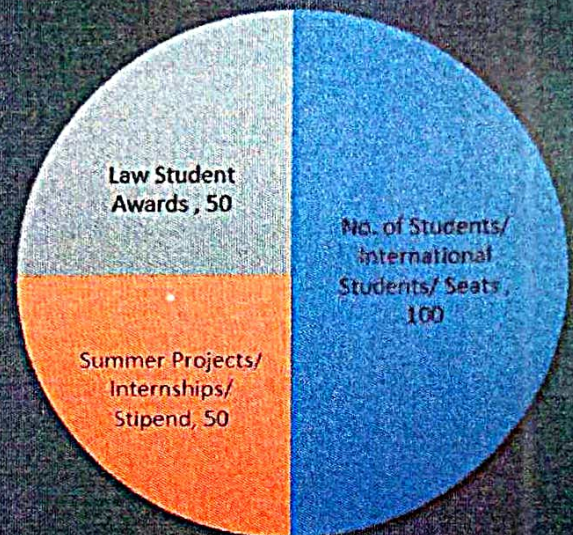

Ranking Law Schools is a challenging task, but we believe that the methodology we used in our ranking process was sound and reliable. We ensured that we follow a rigorous validation and verification process at every stage of the ranking process, and we identified key factors and allocated appropriate weightages to them.

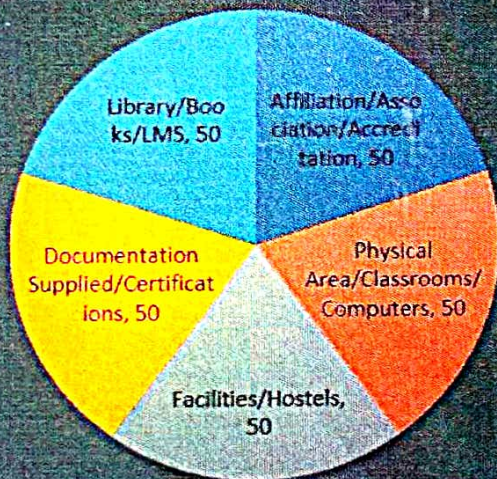

Methodology Weightage (Total 1000)

Admissions, Awards & Delivery System (Total 200)

Infrastructure, Accreditation & Facilities (Total 250)

that responded to our questionnaire, as this became necessary due to the pandemic.

After collecting and verifying all the data, we identified the key factors that we would use to rank the Law Schools. These factors included academic excellence, research output, faculty quality, student satisfaction, employability of graduates, diversity, and international outlook.

We assigned different weights to the various factors to reflect their importance in the ranking process. For example, academic excellence was assigned a higher weightage than diversity because it is a more critical factor in determining the quality of a law institute. Once we had determined the key factors and allocated their respective weightages, we ranked the Law Schools according to their performance in each of these factors. This resulted in a comprehensive ranking of the Law Schools, with each institute being scored and ranked according to their overall performance.

In conclusion, ranking Law Schools is a challenging task, but we believe that the methodology we used in our ranking process was sound and reliable. We ensured that we follow a rigorous validation and verification process at every stage of the ranking process, and we identified key factors and allocated appropriate weightages to them. We hope that our rankings will be useful for prospective law students looking to make an informed decision about where to study.

The legal education system in India offers different courses at different levels, starting from undergraduate level to postgraduate and doctoral levels. The most popular course in Law is the Bachelor of Laws (LLB), which is a three-year undergraduate programme. To pursue an LLB course, a student must have completed a graduation degree in any discipline. The (minimum) percentage requirement for General category candidates ranges from 45% to 55% and that for SC/ST category candidates ranges between 35% and 45%. Other than this, some colleges also fix a minimum percentage requirement that candidates need to fulfill in order to secure admission in the three-year LLB course offered by them.
